IRAQ AND THE NATIONAL GUARD

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I will take my leader time to comment on the privilege I had last week of spending some time with hundreds of South Dakota Guard members and their families.

I wanted to say a few words today about the selfless and courageous sacrifice of the South Dakota Guard and, indeed, all of our soldiers who are placing their lives on the line so that the children of Iraq can inherit a nation safer, stronger, and freer than that of their parents.

Too often, the contributions of our Guard members and reservists have gone unrecognized. But today, the brave soldiers in our Guard and Reserve have become indispensable to protecting our national security.

With the end of the Cold War and the decision to draw down active duty forces, the Nation has dramatically increased its reliance on reservists. Guard and Reserve soldiers have been called up to active duty more frequently, and have been taken away from their families and communities for longer periods of time, than perhaps at any other time in our history. As a result, the line between active and reserve duty has become blurred.

The service of the South Dakota National Guard and Reserve provides a perfect illustration. Two-thirds of South Dakota's National Guard members have been called up since September 11. On a per capita basis, South Dakota has had more of its Guard members activated than any other State. These call-ups have fallen heavily on South Dakota's Army Guard units. According to Governor Michael Rounds, nearly 8 of every 10 South Dakota Army Guard members have already been called up for active duty.

The South Dakota National Guard has six units and 1,200 soldiers in the Iraq theater, including the 740th Transportation Company, the 842nd Engineer Company, the 2nd Battalion of the 147th Field Artillery, the 153rd Engineer Battalion, the 1742nd Transportation Company, and the 216th Engineer Detachment. These soldiers have the gratitude and admiration of our State and our Nation.

Late last week, we were reminded of the dangers they face each and every day.

As I noted on the floor Monday, Army Specialist Dennis Morgan, a member of the South Dakota National Guard, was one of the 12 American soldiers killed in Iraq this past weekend. Specialist Morgan was the sixth South Dakota soldier to die in this war, and the first member of the South Dakota National Guard. While South Dakotans' thoughts and prayers are with Specialist Morgan's family and, indeed, the families of all of those who have lost loved ones in Iraq, we also pray for the safety of the soldiers who remain in Iraq.

Two South Dakota units have received the most public attention as of late--the 740th Transportation Company of Milbank and Brookings and the 842nd Engineer Company of Spearfish, Belle Fourche, and Sturgis.

Unfortunately for the soldiers of these units and their families, the reason these units are in the news is not a happy one. Last week, nearly 300 soldiers from the 740th Transportation Company and the 842nd Engineer Company learned that they would not be coming home when they complete their year-long tour of duty.

According to Jay Brozik, husband of 1LT Sally Brozik who serves in the 740th, members of this unit had been informed they would be heading home soon. Their personal belongings had been packed for the trip home. The troops had completed the medical briefing required prior to leaving the Iraq theater. Their equipment had been transferred to a replacement unit. Their families were eagerly awaiting a joyous return.

All that came to a crashing halt late last week, when the Department of Defense announced that the tours of duty for this unit had been extended at least three months longer than promised.

The story is similar for the 842nd Engineering Company and about 20,000 other active and reserve troops who were informed that the administration had broken its commitment of one-year, "boots on the ground" in Iraq.

Although I am confident all involved will continue to serve their country in the same exemplary fashion they have to date, the administration's decision was difficult to bear for the soldiers and families involved. In the words of Spearfish Mayor Jerry Krambeck, "I don't know what I can say without putting tears in my eyes. All I can do is continue as we are and continue to support the families even more at this point."

Jay Brozick said, "I was thinking my wife would be back for our son's birthday, May 4. Now it's changed everything."

And Ryan Lovrien spoke of his girlfriend, SGT April Semmler of the 740th: "[April] had mentioned hoping after a year to be home and spend time with the family in the summertime and just be out of there. Now they're going to do three or four months."

Mr. President, the cost of failure in Iraq is beyond comprehension. Given the stakes involved for the people of Iraq, the region, and the world, we have no choice but to maintain our commitment and do all we can to bring about a safe, secure, and democratic Iraq. But we do face a choice about how we fulfill this commitment.

I urge the President to redouble his efforts to expand the international presence on the ground. We have the finest forces in the world. Breaking our commitment to these forces is not only unfair, it is shortsighted. Already we see soldiers re-enlisting at lower rates than in the past. Considering that the demands placed on our already overextended forces are unlikely to fall in the future, failure to at least sustain current force levels would undermine our national security.

Mr. President, I know the Senate joins me in commending the service of the men and women in the South Dakota Guard and indeed all of our troops involved in the current conflict in Iraq. I particularly want to express my appreciation for the sacrifices made by the troops of the 740th and the 842nd and their families. They came when they were called, performed as requested, and, under any circumstances, will continue to perform magnificently.

But the burden should be shared--so that we can sustain our current forces and give those who've already sacrificed so much a well-deserved rest.

I yield the floor.
